Man must feel the earth to know himself and recognize his values...God made life simple. It is man who complicates it.

- Charles A. Lindbergh

Charles Augustus Lindbergh (4 February 1902 – 26 August 1974) was an American aviator, military officer, author, inventor, explorer, and environmental activist. At age 25 in 1927, he went from obscurity as a U.S. Air Mail pilot to instantaneous world fame by winning the Orteig Prize: making a nonstop flight from Roosevelt Field, Long Island, New York, to Paris, France. Lindbergh covered the 33 ½-hour, 3,600-statute-mile (5,800 km) flight alone in a single-engine purpose-built Ryan Monoplane, the Spirit of St. Louis.
